

LAUREL D. MONLUX

Attorney at Law — Bio

Lori has considerable experience in civil litigation, commercial law, corporate law, personal injury, and wills and probate.

She has varied courtroom experience consisting of trials, arbitration, hearings and motion practice. One of Lori and Jerry's significant achievements came when they obtained a substantial jury verdict in favor of an insured homeowner in an insurance bad faith case against Allstate Insurance Company.

Lori also represented individuals and small business owners in eminent domain, condemnation, and real property matters when she worked as a contract attorney for the firm of Williams & Williams, PSC, in Bothell, Washington in 2006. While at Williams & Williams, she achieved a noteworthy summary judgment ruling in favor of landowner/business owner over the City of Shoreline in a breach of contract claim by the City.

Prior to that, in 2005, she worked as a contract attorney for the insurance coverage firm of Gordon & Polscer in Seattle practicing insurance coverage and insurance bad faith.

Lori graduated from Rice University, in Houston, Texas, in 1988, with bachelor degrees in English, sociology, and behavioral sciences. During her college career she played on the Rice women's tennis team and was ranked 24th nationally in women's doubles. She was admitted to practice in Washington after completing Washington's APR 6 law clerk program in 1996. She is a member of the Washington State Bar Association.

Lori is married to Cliff and has two children, David, who attends Gonzaga University, and Melina, who attends Ballard High School. She enjoys watching her daughter play basketball and sending money to her son in college. She volunteers as an assistant tennis coach at Ballard and she serves on Ballard's Athletic Booster Club Executive Board.
